Whether teaching a leadership workshop, coaching an executive client, or facilitating a senior team, Renée brings a warm, direct, and insightful style to her work. With more than 17 years as a coach and leadership consultant, she has deep experience in executive coaching, team coaching, and workshop design and delivery. And because she's been a line manager herself, she knows the importance of building leadership skills that are practical, relevant, and effective.

Renée has worked with executives and senior teams at some of America's leading corporations, including PricewaterhouseCoopers, GE, BellSouth, Boston Private Bank & Trust Company, Verizon, United Airlines, and Lockheed. She also has served nonprofit organizations such as Management Sciences for Health, Boston Public Schools, and Water Missions International. In addition, Renée teaches Leadership: The Inner Journey at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government, and coaches executive participants in Harvard Business School's Program for Leadership Development.

From 2002 through 2008, Renée served as an adjunct coach with the Center for Authentic Leadership, where she coached and mentored program participants.

From 1996 through 2000, Renée was the lead consultant for leadership practice at Executive Perspectives, a management training and consulting firm. In that capacity she provided C-level executive coaching, and designed and delivered leadership development workshops for senior management teams across the country. Previously, she worked for a Fortune 250 industrial manufacturer, where she held senior line management and human resource positions.

Renée holds an MBA from Harvard Business School and a Bachelor of Science in Economics and Applied Mathematics from Brown University. She completed her coaching certification with The College of Executive Coaching and is trained to use a variety of assessment instruments, including the MBTI Step II, the Leadership Versatility Index, Benchmarks 360°, Prospector 360°, and the Emotional and Social Competency Inventory.

She enjoys reading historical fiction, spending time with her two teenage sons, sea kayaking, and running.
